14th October - 16th October 2022

Brahms was not only one of the greatest composers of the Romantic era, but also a renowned concert pianist. So, it's not surprising that the piano features centrally in his list of works. He created one of the great bodies of music in the solo keyboard repertoire and used the piano extensively in chamber music: in duos, trios, quartets and a magnificent quintet. Then there are the numerous songs, the works for piano duet, and largest of all, the two great concertos. We shall explore all of these in the lectures, with the help of video and audio recordings; and the weekend concludes with a concert given by the outstanding recital pianists Charles Owen and Dominic Degavino.

14th November - 18th November 2022 ®

The light and airy studio at Dillington has all the tools and equipment needed for binding books in the traditional manner. On this general bookbinding course participants may pursue their own rebinding or repair projects at their own pace under the guidance of our expert tutor, rather than following a particular programme. However, for those who wish it, there will be a focus on binding books in the library style, with cloth-jointed endpapers and split board construction. This is suitable for large heavy books, or reference books which are heavily used, such as encyclopaedias. This focus is not suitable for complete beginners, but if you are new to bookbinding the tutor can accommodate you on the course and will take you through the early stages of case-binding so you will have a good grounding in basic techniques.

The Age of Discovery - The Mercantile Empires

29th October 2022

This day course is the second of a series of standalone courses which considers how our modern understanding of the world took shape. Following the early voyages of discovery, the Portuguese and Spanish powers had divided the newly discovered world between themselves with papal approval at the Treaty of Saragossa. This was to be contested by the emerging Protestant powers of northern Europe led initially by the Dutch and later the English. This day course compares the development of all the European mercantile empires to see how and why some prospered and others failed.

Egyptomania 25th November - 27th November 2022

No other ancient civilisation can lay claim to having repeatedly inspired and caused, on no less than five separate occasions, a massive infusion of ideas and styles into the contemporary styles of a particular time. Its first appearance was in the Roman civilisation, coinciding with the annexation of Egypt into the Roman Empire and the inextricable link between Cleopatra, Julius Caesar and Mark Anthony.

It next undergoes a sixteenth century revival and then in the eighteenth century the first of a series of very important revivals. The invasion by Napoleon at the beginning of the nineteenth century was to herald another upsurge in interest. Later in the nineteenth century with the digging and opening of the Suez Canal and the joint administration of Egypt by Britain and France, there was a continuous flow of visitors, excavations and a continued influence. In the twentieth century the discovery in 1922 of Tutankhamun's tomb and treasures would lead to a renewed worldwide interest and its direct influence across the whole spectrum of the Art Deco movement. The twentieth century's single greatest contribution to the Arts - namely film- also saw the birth of curse of the Mummy in films. Indeed Hollywood and Ancient Egypt have been constant companions for over one hundred years. This course will seek to follow the influence, flow and output of artistic endeavour that has been inspired by Ancient Egypt over the last five hundred years.
